FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Another Dismissal of a Foreclosure Action

Our client, a family member of attorney J.P. Gonzalez-Sirgo, sought J.P.'s help when his bank instituted a foreclosure action on his home. Not having the funds to pay for legal services, J.P. agreed to defend him on a contingency fee basis. The bank failed to personally serve our client with the lawsuit, instead attempting to obtain jurisdiction over our client by using constructive service of process or service by publication. We challenged the bank's attempt to obtain jurisdiction over our client in this manner. The bank's position was that it performed a diligent search of our client's whereabouts and that they were not able to locate him in order to personally serve our client. In support of its position, the bank filed affidavits describing the attempts made to locate our client. We set out to take the depositions of those involved in the "diligent search". The depositions proved that anything but a diligent search was made to locate our client. In fact, in our estimation, the affidavits were fraudulent containing false attempts at locating our client and notarial discrepancies. The Court agreed with our position and dismissed the foreclosure action. The case moved on to a hearing on our motion to tax attorneys' fees and costs wherein the court awarded $36,721.50 to our client. The Bank has stated that it would appeal the Court's decision.
