Wrongful Death Case Settles for $525,000

Attorney J.P. Gonzalez-Sirgo of Coral Gables, Florida settled a wrongful death case for $525,000. Our clients were driving westbound on State Road 90 in Miami, Florida on their way to Marco Island to vacation with family. The husband driver, his wife, their baby, and our clients' cousin, were along for the trip. Tragically, the family never made it to Marco Island. As the family approached the intersection of Southwest 137th Avenue and 8th Street, an SUV traveling southbound on Southwest 137th Avenue t-boned our clients' vehicle on the passenger side resulting in the death of the 21 year old wife. The wife was survived by her husband, their baby, and her parents.

The driver of the SUV claimed that the accident was caused by the husband driver speeding and running a red light. This, he argued, was supported by the traffic homicide investigation completed by the police. The police cited the husband driver for running a red light and causing the accident. The driver of the SUV also relied on the statement given to police, as summarized in the traffic homicide report, by an independent witness in support of their position. The husband driver held firm that the driver of the SUV was the one who ran the red light.

We were retained to represent the estate of the deceased wife, the husband driver, the baby, and the deceased wife's parents just 2 months prior to the statute of limitations expiration. Prior to retaining our firm, two prominent plaintiff's firms in Miami had turned down our clients' case. Once retained, our investigation revealed a different story. Rather than relying on the witness statements summarized in the traffic homicide report, we sought out the actual tape recordings of the witness' statements. After listening to the tapes, it became apparent that the witnesses were not certain as to who ran the red light and were not exactly sure as to what happened. Most of the thoughts offered by the witnesses were of "after-the-fact." Our subsequent deposition of the main witness revealed many inconsistencies in the witness' testimony which brought his credibility into question. We also discovered through discovery that the driver of the SUV was on his cell phone and lost at the time of the accident.

With the above discoveries and the use of an accident reconstruction expert, an economist, and an expert on the effects of cell phone use while driving, we were able to secure a significant settlement at the mediation of the case that will serve as the foundation for the baby's future.
